CIA Girls' Apartment Is Invaded

A man broke into a Georgetown apartment early today, grabbed a Central Intelligence Agency employee in her bed, and warned: "Don't scream. Remember Mrs. Lockwood."

Mrs. Frances Lockwood was beaten and tied up in her apartment at the Boston House, 1711 Massachusetts Ave. NW, last April in an unsolved case where the motive apparently was robbery.

The CIA employee, an attractive 30-year-old blond, did scream when the intruder moved his hand from the mouth, police said.

Sex Squad Det. William R. Holden said the noise awakened her roommate, a 39-year-old CIA employee who had been asleep in a second bedroom.

The roommate ran into the other bedroom, and the thug lunged forward, grabbed her around her throat, but quickly let her free.

In panic, he whirled around and around, finally headed for a window, and climbed down a fire escape by which he had come in.

Det. Holden said the attacker took $42 from his first victim's wallet, apparently before he grabbed her on the bed.

Police said they got previous little description of the man from the victims—only that he was colored, about 5-feet-11 inches and perhaps had tennis shoes on.

Police said a CIA investigator came to the women's apartment shortly after they did and asked that no information on the attack be released. The CIA is notably averse to publicity about its employees.

Meanwhile, police are making no headway in their probe of the Lockwood case. Mrs. Lockwood, 41, white, was found lying on the floor beside her bed, her hands tied behind her with a garter belt.

Police believe she had been on the floor, in that position, possibly for as long as three days.

She has been in critical condition, partly paralyzed and unable to speak, at Washington Hospital Center ever since she was discovered.

A policeman has communicated with her by working out a system in which she taps her fingers on his palm in response to yes-or-no questions, but so far this hasn't led officers anywhere.
